This is just an informative document about three modern hangul syllables that were in Unicode before version 2.0. No action necessarily needs to be taken.

Although this is about things that were deprecated more than two decades ago, I think it is still worth documenting this, because the Unicode 1.1.5 data is sometimes used to obtain the list of the 1930 modern hangul syllables in KS X 1002 (as KS X 1002 is not encoded according to any legacy encoding). I found these errors years ago, but I did not formally document them until now.

In the Unicode 1.1.5 data (<http://www.unicode.org/Public/1.1-Update/UnicodeData-1.1.5.txt>), the following three lines can be found:

- 384E;HANGUL SYLLABLE SSANGPIEUP I SSANGSIOS;Lo;0;L;1108 1175 11BB;;;N;;;;;
- 40BC;HANGUL SYLLABLE SSANGPIEUP I SIOS;Lo;0;L;1108 1175 11BA;;;N;;;;;
- 436C;HANGUL SYLLABLE KHIEUKH O CHIEUCH;Lo;0;L;110F 1169 11BE;;;N;;;;;

The character names and the canonical decomposition mappings of these three characters suggest that they were ㅸ, ㅹ, and ㅺ respectively. However, these three characters actually had wrong names and wrong canonical decomposition mappings.

Background information

The modern hangul syllables in Unicode 1.1 (0x3400–0x4DFF; 6656 characters) consisted of the following four parts:

- 0x3400–0x3D2D (2350 characters): from KS X 1001 (formerly known as KS C 5601) – first defined in Unicode 1.0
- 0x3D2E–0x44B7 (1930 characters): from KS X 1002 (formerly known as KS C 5657)
  - As KS X 1002 was developed as a supplementary character set of KS X 1001, there are no overlapping characters between these two KS standards.
- 0x44B8–0x44BD (6 characters): from GB 12052-89 (Chinese GB standard for hangul); only the ones that are neither in the two KS standards above nor in the first 2370 non-KS modern hangul syllables (see below)
- 0x44BE–0x4DFF (2370 characters): the first 2370 modern hangul syllables that are not in the two KS standards above

0x384E

This is a hangul syllable from KS X 1001, at 27-69 (0x3B65; EUC-KR 0xBBE5).

The character—in all versions—is clearly 뺏, not 뺏 (and 뺏 is not found in KS X 1001).

Here is the representative glyph of 0x384E in Unicode 1.0 (<http://www.unicode.org/versions/Unicode1.0.0/CodeCharts1.pdf#page=37>). The representative glyph is clearly 뵈, not 뵈.

Korean Hangul Syllables U+3400 → U+3D2F

Standards. The Hangul Syllables are taken from KS C 5601 and are encoded in the same order as that standard. This means that the Unicode and KS code values can be computed from each other via a simple formula, rather than requiring table lookup.

Encoding Structure. The Unicode block for Hangul syllables is divided into the following ranges:

U+3400 → U+3D2D	KS C 5601 Hangul syllables
U+3D2E → U+3D2F	Currently unassigned

Here is the representative glyph of 0x384E in ISO/IEC 10646-1:1993. The representative glyph is clearly 뵈, not 뵈.

I took screenshots of Character Map on Korean Windows 3.1. The character at 0xbbe5 in Korean Windows 3.1 is clearly 𐄀, not 𐄁.

In addition, someone did ask about this in the Unicode Mailing List, in 1995 (<http://www.unicode.org/mail-arch/unicode-ml/Archives-Old/UML002/0005.html>).

However, I found one anomaly.

The table in hangul-codes.txt at line 5283 has:

```
5283 0xABB5 0xBBE5 0xBBE5 U+C0A3
```

This says that byte-pair 0xBBE5 from KSC5601-1987 maps to C0A3 in Unicode 2.0. I calculate (and Asmus's algorithm confirms this), that:

```
U+C0A3 = HANGUL SYLLABLE SSANGPIEUP I SIOS
```

The KSC5601 table on unicode.org has the line:

```
0x3B65 0x384E # HANGUL SYLLABLE SSANGPIEUP I SSANGSIOS
```

Note that 0x3B65 + 0x8080 = 0xBBE5. And Unicode 1.1 indeed says:

```
U+384E = HANGUL SYLLABLE SSANGPIEUP I SSANGSIOS

Either the KSC5601 map is wrong, or the Unicode 1.1 description.

The glyphs for SSANGSIOS and SIOS are similar. When I look at xBBE5 through UnionWay's KSC font, it looks like it has SIOS not SSANGSIOS. My guess therefore is that the Unicode 1.1 description is wrong on this one.

(And it seems that this question was not answered.)

I found this error when I was checking whether all the 2350 hangul syllables at 0x3400–0x3D2D in Unicode 1.1 were exactly the same as the ones in KS X 1001. When checking using the Unicode 1.1.5 data, this was spotted right away – ㅸ was the only one not in KS X 1001, and ㅹ, which is in KS X 1001, was missing instead.

Summary: 0x384E in Unicode 1.1 was ㅸ, not ㅹ

Summary: 0x436C in Unicode 1.1 was 콧, not 콧

I found this error when I was checking whether all the modern hangul syllables in GB 12052-89 (<http://blogs.adobe.com/CCJKType/files/2014/12/gb12052-uni.txt> GB 12052-89 to Unicode mapping table, made by me; carefully and thoroughly proofread three times) were covered by the hangul syllables in Unicode 1.1. When checking using the Unicode 1.1.5 data, this was spotted right away – all the other modern hangul syllables in GB 12052-89 were covered except ㅟ (at 45-65 (0x4D61) in GB 12052-89). Later I noticed that 0x436C was originally mapped to ㅟ in the <ftp://ftp.unicode.org/Public/MAPPINGS/OBSOLETE/EASTASIA/KSC/HANGUL.TXT> file, but later it was remapped to ㅟ (<ftp://ftp.unicode.org/Public/MAPPINGS/OBSOLETE/EASTASIA/KSC/HangulReadMe.html> and <http://www.unicode.org/L2/L2004/04392-hangul.html>). This made me to verify that 0x436C in Unicode 1.1 was indeed ㅟ, and found out that the intended character was actually ㅟ.

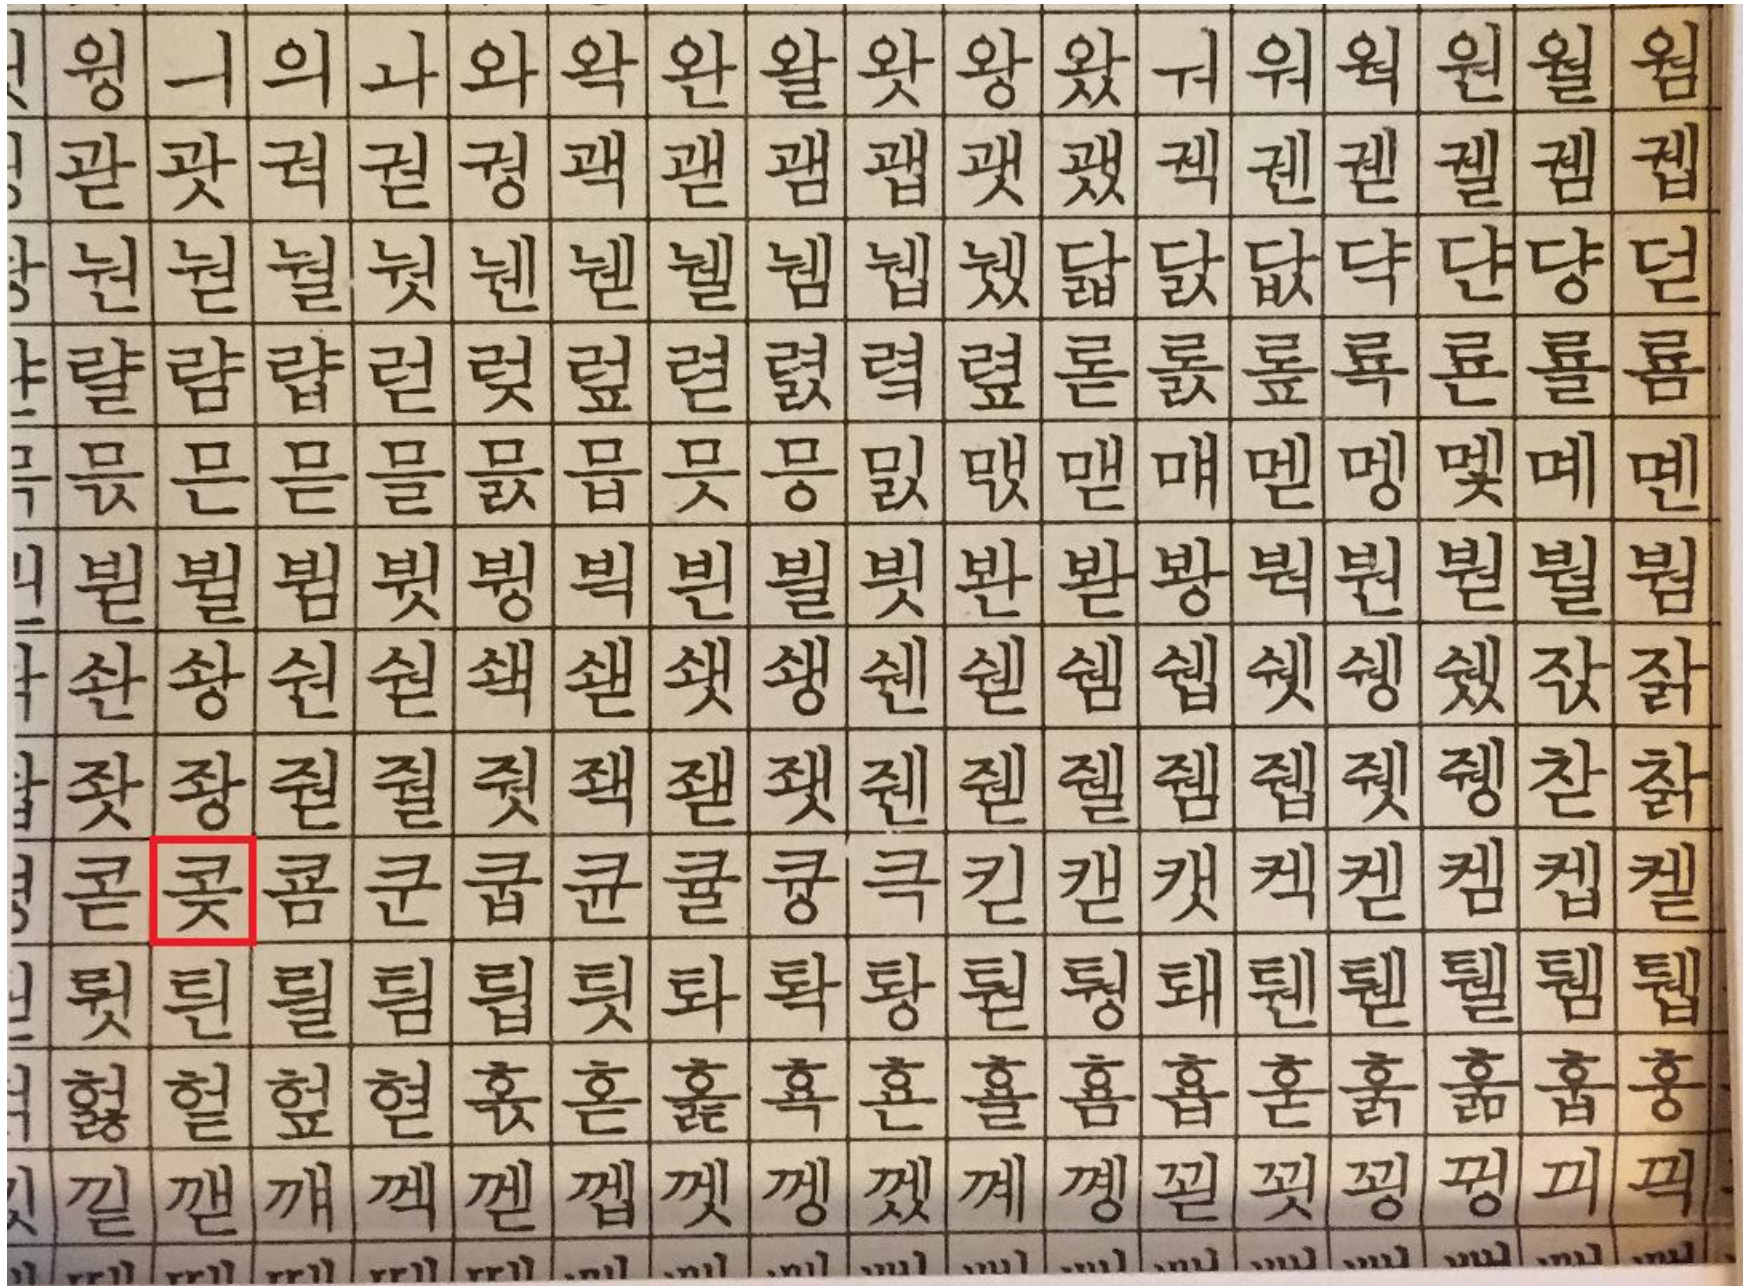

(And this eventually led me to check whether all the 1930 modern hangul syllables in KS X 1002 match the characters at 0x3D2E–0x44B7 in the Unicode 1.1.5 data. I checked them years ago, and no other errors were found except the two mentioned in this document.)

The character is clearly 꺠, not 꺠 (and 꺠 is not found in GB 12052-89).

Conclusion and comments

The characters at 0x384E, 0x40BC, and 0x436C were actually ㅉ, ㅊ, and ㅋ respectively – they were not ㅊ, ㅉ, and ㅋ respectively, unlike their names and canonical decomposition mappings suggest.

The three rows in the Unicode 1.1.5 data (<http://www.unicode.org/Public/1.1-Update/UnicodeData-1.1.5.txt>) should have been:

- 384E;HANGUL SYLLABLE SSANGPIEUP I SIOS;Lo;0;L;1108 1175 11BA;;;;N;;;;;
  - Corresponds to C0A3;HANGUL SYLLABLE BBIS;Lo;0;L;1108 1175 11BA;;;;N;;;;; in Unicode 2.0 and all subsequent versions
- 40BC;HANGUL SYLLABLE SSANGPIEUP I SSANGSIOS;Lo;0;L;1108 1175 11BB;;;;N;;;;;
  - Corresponds to C0A4;HANGUL SYLLABLE BBISS;Lo;0;L;1108 1175 11BB;;;;N;;;;; in Unicode 2.0 and all subsequent versions
- 436C;HANGUL SYLLABLE KHIEUKH O CIEUC;Lo;0;L;110F 1169 11BD;;;;N;;;;;
  - Corresponds to CF6A;HANGUL SYLLABLE KOJ;Lo;0;L;110F 1169 11BD;;;;N;;;;; in Unicode 2.0 and all subsequent versions

<ftp://ftp.unicode.org/Public/MAPPINGS/OBSOLETE/EASTASIA/KSC/HANGUL.TXT>

<http://www.unicode.org/L2/L2004/04392-hangul.html>

<ftp://ftp.unicode.org/Public/MAPPINGS/OBSOLETE/EASTASIA/KSC/HangulReadMe.html>

Consequently, it would be much better if these rows in HANGUL.TXT are amended to:

5284	BBE5	BBE5	ABB5	384E	384E	C0A3	SSANGPIEUP	I	SIOS
5285	-	98A4	ABB6	-	40BC	C0A4	SSANGPIEUP	I	SSANGSIOS
9067	-	B19E	C5B8	-	436C	CF6A	KHIEUKH	O	CIEUC
9068	-	B19F	C5B9	-	-	CF6B	KHIEUKH	O	CHIEUCH

It is very excellent that hangul syllables were entirely reassigned in Unicode 2.0, especially with names and canonical decomposition mappings that are “algorithmically” defined, which completely eliminated the chance of having errors like the ones mentioned in this document. If the reassignment did not take place and if Unicode kept the same character assignment for hangul syllables (with “hand-crafted” names and canonical decomposition mappings), people would have to suffer when dealing with the three hangul syllables mentioned above.

* The 6656 hangul syllables in Unicode 1.1 did not completely cover the 2679 hangul syllables in KPS 9566, as KPS 9566-97 was published years after Unicode 1.1 was released. The four characters that are in KPS 9566 but were not in Unicode 1.1 are 쥌 (U+C836), 쥍 (U+CA34), 쥎 (U+CD44), and 쥏 (U+D5D5).
